Subject matter of the invention: the invention pertains to a process for the pre-emphasis of an optical multiplex signal.

Closest prior art: a process for the pre-emphasis of an optical wavelength multiplex signal (EP 1 130 803 A2) forms the closest prior art. This citation discloses a process for measuring OSNR (optical signal-to-noise ratio) and a method for the pre-emphasis of an optical multiplex signal in which the OSNR measurement method is used.

Problem: the closest prior art process relates to a complicated method of measuring noise between channels. In addition, measured values from intermediate stations in the transmission path are required in order to adjust pre-emphasis.

Solution: claim 1 provides the solution to this problem. Claim 1 discloses that mean signal power is determined for the transmitter-side signals and new signal values are determined on the basis of actual signal power at the transmitter and the receiver and mean signal power.
